

Three moves the data already supports: buy, build, acquire

Where to deploy capital across 1,000 live SaaS businesses.

Recurring-revenue businesses are being sold below the market's own price

PROSP — $128K MRR, listed at $1M (0.8x).
PolyPick — $20.7K MRR, listed at $22.7K (0.1x).
Both priced well below the market median of 2.4x.

❏ Recommendation: Screen every proven-MRR listing under 1x before repricing corrects.

Growth has stopped everywhere except two categories

Only Dev Tools (+6.4%) and Analytics (+4.9%) show consistent positive momentum across the dataset. All other tracked categories are flat or negative.

 Recommendation: Build in Dev Tools and Analytics. Treat other categories as acquisition or monetization plays.

The biggest audiences are the worst monetized

Audience vs peers

Revenue per active subscriber

Social Media leads in audience size (median 2,762) but delivers low revenue per active subscriber (~$9.46). The distribution task is done; monetization is the gap.

📌 Recommendation: Acquire social audiences and prioritise pricing & paywall integration over further audience growth.

Revenue per customer differs 13x by category — audience size doesn't explain it

Marketing users pay ~53.83 vs Health & Fitness ~4.07 — a 13.2x gap (rounded to 13x). Category selection strongly determines monetization ceiling.

📌 Recommendation: Weight build/acquisition decisions by revenue-per-user, not audience size.

What we do next

Buy

Proven-revenue listings priced under 1x (e.g., PROSP, PolyPick): immediate cash flow and margin on entry.

Build

Focus new product investment on Dev Tools and Analytics — the only categories with measurable growth.

Acquire

Purchase Social Media audiences and implement pricing/paywall playbooks to unlock latent revenue.

Deprioritize

Mobile Apps, Health & Fitness, Productivity — large reach but weak monetization and no category growth; treat as acquisition/monetization targets, not build bets.

These four moves form a single portfolio: cheap cash flow now (Buy), medium-term product growth (Build), and audience acquisition with monetization upside (Acquire). Deprioritise low-monetization build bets.
