What this data actually measures

1

Verified, not self-reported

Every figure is pulled directly from a connected payment provider — Stripe, RevenueCat, Paddle, Lemon Squeezy, and others — so revenue is machine-verified.

2

Every stage of company

From seven-figure category leaders to first-dollar side projects, the leaderboard spans the full spectrum of bootstrapped and VC-light businesses.

3

Broad category mix

AI tools, e-commerce enablement, SaaS, content creation, fintech, and consumer mobile apps all appear side by side on the same leaderboard.

4

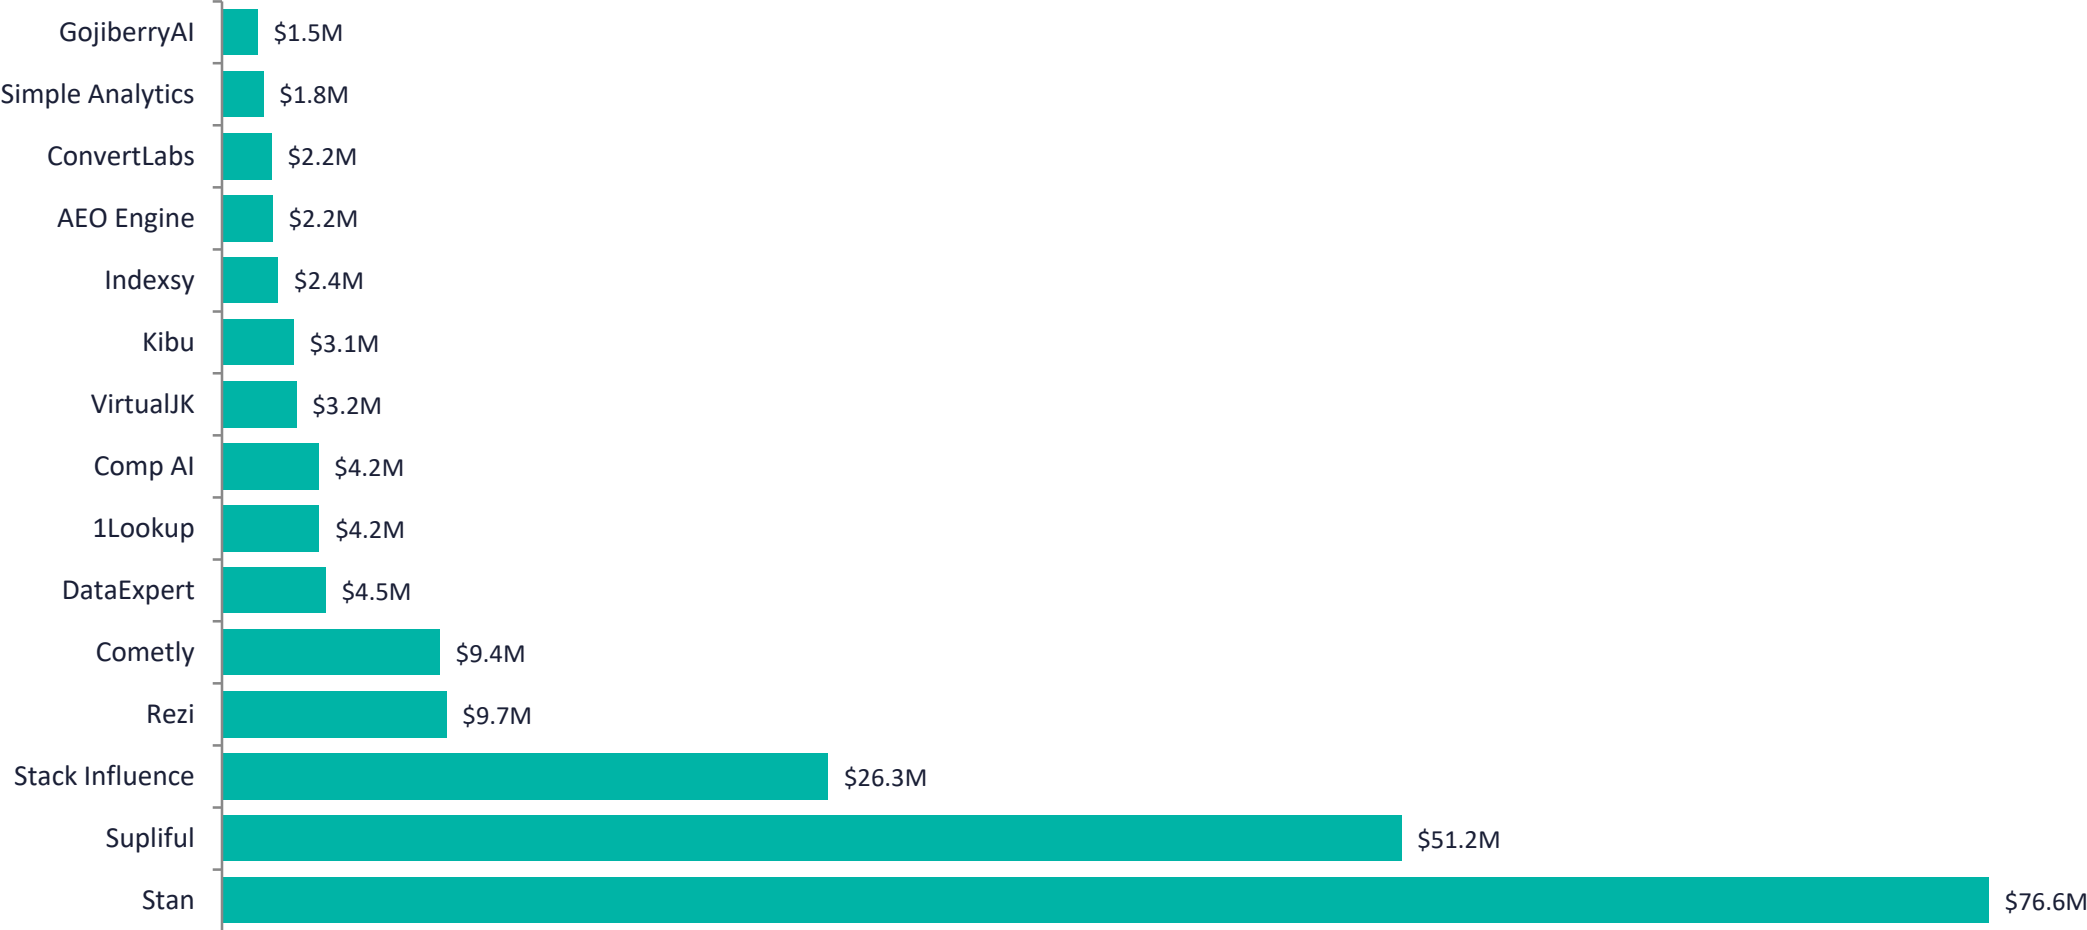

A live marketplace

Many listed startups are actively for sale, with an asking price and revenue multiple attached — this is also a snapshot of the micro-M&A market.

TAKEAWAYS

What the data tells us

1

Revenue is a long tail

A handful of companies — led by Stan at $76.6M — dwarf the rest; most of the 1,900+ tracked startups earn under $500K all-time.

2

E-commerce enablement still wins big

The two largest earners both help others sell products, not the flashiest AI demo — infrastructure for commerce remains the biggest prize.

3

Growth doesn't require massive scale

The fastest 30-day growth stories — Backlinker AI, WalLead AI, BackPedal — are mid-size companies proving momentum matters more than size.

4

A real market for buying startups exists

Dozens of profitable, revenue-verified startups are listed for sale with transparent multiples, from under $10K to $10M asking prices.
